

David Papineau - Perception and Representation

There seems little doubt that conscious sensory experiences are representations. But it does not follow that conscious sensory properties and representational properties are necessarily interdependent, as representationalists about perception maintain. I shall show that this further representationalist thesis faces a number of problems, and sketch an alternative that avoids them.